I have changed the rules for posting comments on the the site to disallow comments for not registered users. I apologize for this restriction however in almost a year since it is up I've received around ~99% spam comments which consumes too much of my time to check and filter out.

It is a sad that powerful people and organizations can be so ruthless. They act indirectly trough their publicity agents, however the end result is the same, their name land in spam messages trying to sell everything and anything, things that I really don't need, its all just a huge waste of time and resources. There is no point to go in any more details, just that this is the reality of internet today, unfortunately locks and rules are required to keep one sane.

My apologies again for any human visitor trying to live an anonymous feedback to my work.

Thank you for your understanding,
